Overall experiences and progress of children and young people: outstanding

Children make strong progress due to receiving individualised care filled with love, warmth, nurture, patience and empathy. Living in a family orientated environment helps children to thrive. For example, when they return from school, children are met with a cuddle and the smell of a freshly prepared family dinner ready for them to enjoy.

Two children have lived at the home for over two years and the third child for over a year. Children are cared for by a consistent, experienced and skilled team of staff who have provided stability and who are committed to helping them achieve their very best. As a result, the children have strong relationships with each other and staff, and they are excelling from their starting points.

All of the children are doing exceptionally well with their education. For example, one child, who previously had numerous school detentions and exclusions, has moved up two academic levels and now has strong attendance levels. Another child has achieved 100% attendance from a starting point of 56% and, as a result, is now meeting all of his learning targets. Children's teachers are overwhelmingly positive about children's attendance and academic achievements and how the unwavering support, encouragement and care they receive from staff has helped them, including when there have been challenges in school. Children continually meet their targets and have clear aspirations for their futures.

The emotional and physical health of children has improved because of the support of staff, who draw on developmental theory to help them understand each child and the support they need. For example, the sensitive support of staff has helped one child remedy a health issue that was impacting on their daily living. As a result, the child has grown in confidence and self-esteem, and this has helped him form friendships in and outside of school. Strong advocacy by the registered manager and staff contributed to one child receiving a medical diagnosis and support that has improved his emotional wellbeing and helped him to make significant measurable progress with his learning.

Children grow in understanding, skill and confidence through participation in an array of activities that meet their individual needs and reflect their creative and physical skills and their social interests. For example, due to consistent and stable care, two children play for football clubs and have won awards for their skill and contribution to their team. Another child enjoys regular sessions at a music studio, where he writes and produces his own music. All of the children have enjoyed holidays abroad and, more locally, at the seaside, and home activities such as cooking and baking.

Children's voices are a priority. Children are central in decision-making about how they want to be supported by staff. Being fully involved in their care and having their views taken seriously helps them to feel valued, to engage and to want to continue to make progress. For example, the children are routinely involved in developing their plans and setting out what support they need from staff and what would help them to engage with this support.

Children have been helped to rebuild significant relationships and to start spending time with family and friends independently despite previous constraints. This is helping them to build a positive support system with the aim of preventing social isolation when they move on from the home.

Children feel accepted and have a positive sense of belonging. Staff ensure that diversity is celebrated and that children have what they need both practically and emotionally to fully embrace their heritage and identity.

The home environment is beautiful and is a comfortable home for children. The children were proud to show the inspector around their home and to showcase the effort that they have put into personalising their own bedrooms and really making these spaces their own.

How well children and young people are helped and protected: good

The registered manager and staff know the children exceptionally well. Children enjoy positive, nurturing relationships with staff and feel comfortable in confiding in them when they have worries. Staff follow safeguarding processes and work in collaboration with other professionals to formulate safety plans as needed to keep the children safe and reduce risk.

Professional curiosity is at the forefront of staff practice. Regular reflective practice helps staff to spot, and take time to understand, any trends and patterns in children's behaviour and what needs to happen next. When safeguarding incidents arise, the circumstances are reviewed in a timely and thorough way to ensure learning, information-sharing and to request support from partner agencies, as necessary.

Children are helped by staff to understand risk and how they can keep themselves safer. Good-quality one-to-one work with children helps them to understand the ways in which they might come to harm and how to keep safe. Consequently, children's risk-taking behaviours have significantly reduced.

The use of physical restraint is rare and used only as a last resort to keep the child safe. When a child has been held, they are given the opportunity to discuss why restraint was used and if they want to raise any concerns. This helps to ensure that children have a voice, that relationships can be repaired and that adjustments can be made to their care as needed.

The registered manager's safer recruitment processes are clear and reduce the likelihood of children being cared for by unsuitable adults.

The effectiveness of leaders and managers: outstanding

An exceptional leader leads the home. She is ambitious and relentless in advocating for the children. This has helped the children to make consistent and exceptional progress. She has genuine care for the children and drives the team to provide the best support that they can. She actively demonstrates a positive parenting model of care through her own work. Her role modelling has a positive influence on the practice of the team, and this has supported the children to be settled and make meaningful progress.

The registered manager is invested in the staff team and sees the benefit of their continuous professional development for children. Consequently, staff have access to a range of training to help them in their roles. A professional development programme is also available for those who want to progress to different roles within the organisation.

Child-centred, reflective practice is at the core of professional supervision and team meetings. Research-based practice is used to help staff understand lived trauma, the impact of this on children's daily lives and appropriate responses to support their ongoing growth. The staff feel valued by the registered manager, and in turn, they invest in the children. Staff retention at the home is excellent, which means children receive consistent care and have deep, meaningful, positive relationships with staff.

The registered manager has extremely good monitoring systems. She is aware of the service's areas of strength and areas of development. External professionals say that communication is excellent, that they are kept updated about the children's progress and there is strong working together to ensure the best outcomes for children.

No requirements or recommendations have been raised.
