Overall experiences and progress of children and young people: good

Children benefit from living in a home that is warm, welcoming and exceptionally well presented. The decor is of a high standard, and the atmosphere is homely and nurturing. Personal touches are evident throughout, with photos and children's artwork that celebrate their achievements. Bedrooms are highly individualised, reflecting children's personalities and interests. One child's bedroom has just been redecorated and reflects the ideas, colours and inspiration from the mood board the child designed.

Children who are new to the home are always welcomed with sensitivity and careful planning. The transition process is meticulously planned, ensuring that all of their needs are understood and met. This approach represents good practice and supports smooth, well-managed moves into the home.

Children are making meaningful progress relative to their individual starting points. Families consistently commend the progress made by children. Staff understand the importance of supporting children to develop essential life skills. There has been notable advancement in children's independence, with children now able to complete some tasks independently with reduced staff support.

Staff provide consistent support to help children engage in education. They work closely with education providers when children experience difficulties attending school. One child's attendance has improved since moving into the home. The manager has also delivered training and shared resources with one school, strengthening their understanding of the strategies used in the home to support the child. This has helped the child manage daily transitions into school more successfully and ensured that they have consistent access to education and learning.

Children are healthy, and staff support them to attend medical appointments and maintain a healthy lifestyle, ensuring that they eat a healthy, nutritious and balanced diet. When children have not wanted to attend appointments, staff have worked incredibly hard to ensure that children understand the importance of looking after their health and enabling them to overcome associated phobias and fears.

Staff actively encourage children to take part in a range of new experiences and activities that nurture their talents and interests. For example, both children are now members of a local inclusive rugby team. Children are also supported to socialise with their peers, helping them build relationships, develop independence and gain a strong sense of achievement and self-worth.

How well children and young people are helped and protected: good

Children develop strong, trusting relationships with staff, which form the foundation for their progress and emotional security. Staff know the children well and respond to their individual needs. Following incidents, staff engage children in meaningful conversations that help children to reflect on their behaviour and build emotional resilience. This restorative approach supports children to better understand their feelings and develop more positive coping strategies.

Staff are aware of how to keep children safe. However, children's assessments do not identify all known risks and include inaccurate information. This prevents clear guidance being provided to staff to meet children's needs. However, due to improved communication amongst the staff team, staff are able to evidence sound knowledge of the correct plans. This has ensured a consistent approach to the care provided despite plans not being up to date.

Staff only physically intervene with children as a last resort. This is to prevent children from harming themselves and others. However, during a recent incident, staff were hesitant in using physical intervention techniques, which resulted in the incident continuing to escalate. Leaders and managers have met with the team to reflect on this incident, and lessons have been learnt to strengthen staff confidence and skillset in this area.

Leaders act promptly when a child raises an allegation or concern. They undertake thorough, effective investigations and ensure the child is informed of the outcome. This transparent approach reassures children that their voice matters and that they are both valued and heard.

Errors have been made with the medication administering procedures. The manager has been quick to investigate each incident. Changes to practice have been implemented to avoid reoccurrence and staff have received additional training and support. All staff are trained in medication administration and undertake an annual competency assessment meaning the likelihood of further errors is reduced.

The location risk assessment provides staff with sufficient information to safeguard children from risks in the community. However, the manager has not consulted relevant people about the appropriateness of the location of the home and any risks associated with the area.

The effectiveness of leaders and managers: good

The home has been through an unsettled period due to changes in the management team and the instability of staffing. This has recently settled with the appointment of a new manager, providing the team with the required direction, support and guidance. The remaining staff vacancies have now been appointed to, and staff are being used from the sister home until safer recruitment checks are completed, reducing the use of agency staff members.

The manager demonstrates a passion and commitment to the children in her care and to the overall environment of the home. Her experience in the field is evident in the way she leads the team, bringing knowledge and expertise to the role. The manager is ably supported by a dedicated deputy manager, who shares her commitment to delivering high quality care and supporting the staff. Leaders have a visible presence in the home and provide support to the manager in her practice.

The manager completes regular audits. However staffing shortages led to the delay of a physical intervention record being reviewed. As a result, information was not shared with relevant professionals in a timely manner. Leaders and managers have taken action to rectify this.

Staff benefit from regular, reflective and purposeful team meetings. These meetings cover a wide range of topics relevant to the children living in the home and provide an important forum for communication, idea-sharing, and constructive challenge. This supports staff to develop professionally and maintain good quality practice. Therapeutic parenting approaches are increasingly becoming a consistent feature of practice within the home.

Supervision for staff is conducted on a monthly basis, with sessions being clearly recorded. These supervision sessions are structured, with actions and targets being set for each staff member. The manager recognises the emotional impact of the work and ensures that staff well-being is actively supported.

Training is well-managed, with both core training and targeted training to meet children's needs. New staff receive a thorough induction and ongoing support, helping them to deliver consistent, well-informed care.

The management team is constantly seeking new ways to celebrate children's achievements and provide them with enriching experiences. While some initiatives are still in the early stages, they demonstrate a forward-thinking and child-centred approach that is steadily becoming embedded across the home.
